Synopsis

A journey through the history, culture and customs of a nomadic, hunting based people that threatened Rome under the leadership of Attila, the fiercest of their leaders.

With great thoroughness and clarity, Ana Martos tells us about the rise of Attila, his battles, the assault on Rome and his death on his wedding night. We also learn about the Hun people and how they first made a notable appearance in the 2nd century B.C. when they settled near the Great Wall of China. This same people eventually migrated towards neighboring lands near the Black Sea and modern day Ukraine and were always in search of better pastures. Later they pushed farther towards the West and began pressuring the Roman Empire, nearly leading to its fall.
